TOOLBOX TALK

FROM THE OHS CORNER | REACH TRUCK SAFETY

Reach Trucks are forklifts used in narrow aisle applications, such as warehouses. They are designed to have two outer legs that help distribute the load and a single set of wheels in the back. The wheels are located below the operator, which helps create a tighter turn radius. This allows operators to navigate smaller spaces, and still be able to reach higher racking. Making your aisles taller and more narrow is a good way to create more space when your warehouse becomes cramped, but it can also make navigation and material handling difficult.

Pedestrian Safety::

- Don't ride or stand on Reach Truck.
- Be aware of your surroundings when Reach Truck are operating nearby.
- Don't engage in horseplay on or around Reach Truck.
- Don't walk or stand under Reach Truck loads. Don't allow a driver to pass a load over your head.
- CAUTION, Look Out for Reach Truck Traffic, and pedestrian walkway markers are signs

Operator Safety:

Even though authorized drivers are the only ones who should be driving, it's still important to know Reach Truck operator safety basics:

- Do not exceed the rated capacity shown on the Reach Truck nameplate.
- Always complete pre-check inspections(SHE-FORM-23) to ensure that equipment is fit for use.
- Don't allow bystanders or coworkers to ride or stand on a forklift at any time.
- Do not pass the forks or loads over anyone's head or allow anyone to get beneath them.
- Conduct regular Reach Truck maintenance according to company procedures.
- Don't engage in horseplay or reckless driving.
- Always wear your seatbelt
